Huis van kennis,
cultuur en inspiratie

“Libraries open hidden worlds, they offer shelter and company, they teach you to respect social and cultural achievements, they help you in bringing up children, they fill up specific gaps in the knowledge of those who are short of it, they facilitate friendships, and they make sure literary and digital deficiencies are dealt with. All this brings about that people who visit libraries are more capable citizens, and that they can contribute better to our democratic society ...”

Digital inclusion

In our rapidly digitizing societies, an increasing number of senior citizens have difficulty keeping up with the rapid technological developments and thus coping with modern life. As a result, a large number of older people lack sufficient digital skills to adjust to and fully participate in modern society
